Health Resources and Services Administration (HRSA)

The Health Resources and Services Administration (HRSA), the lead U.S. Department of Health and Human Services agency for improving access to health care for underserved and vulnerable individuals, administers a community-based network of quality primary and preventive health care services that form the foundation of the Nation's health care safety net.

HRSA administers most of its services and programs through four main bureaus and other key offices: the Bureau of Health Professions, the Bureau of Primary Health Care, the HIV/AIDS Bureau, the Maternal and Child Health Bureau, the Office of Special Programs, and the Office of Rural Health Policy.

For residents of more than 3,400 medically underserved communities, HRSA programs improve access to primary care services via community and migrant health centers, health care programs for homeless people and residents of public housing, and rural health services research and outreach

HRSA supports programs that provide access to comprehensive care and medications for low-income, underserved people with HIV/AIDS through the Ryan White CARE Act.

Working in close cooperation with States and communities to build systems that are equal to the needs of every child, including those with special health care needs, and every family, HRSA programs expand access to vital maternal and child health services.

HRSA programs encourage health professionals to serve vulnerable populations, support greater cultural diversity in health professions training and education to meet the needs of an increasingly diverse Nation, and make sure that health professions curricula respond to changing health demands. Furthermore, HRSA oversees the national system that allocates organs, tissues, and bone marrow for transplant.

The HRSA Information Center Catalog

The HRSA Information Center is a nationwide point of entry for publications, resources, and referrals on health care services for low-income, uninsured individuals and those with special health care needs. Through the Information Center, health care professionals, policymakers, researchers, and members of the public can obtain material on HRSA-supported public health programs.

Publications contained in this catalog may be used by public health officials, health care providers, academic institutions, policymakers, and consumers. Materials in the catalog also may be ordered directly from the HRSA Information Center Web site at www.ask.hrsa.gov. Publications produced after this catalog went to print are available on and may be ordered from the Web site.

The catalog is organized into three major sections:

- Publications Grouped by Major Subject Areas
- Alphabetical Index of Publications by Title
- Order Form
